

HONORABLE RONALD B. LEIGHTON

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT TACOMA

TERYN SMITH, an incapacitated person, and DEBORAH AND DOUGLAS SMITH, her co-guardians,

Case No. C04-5868RBL

Plaintiffs,

ORDER ON MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

v.

NORTH THURSTON SCHOOL DISTRICT,

Defendant.

Introduction.

This matter is before the court on the Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment [Dkt.#9] and the Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Dkt. #21]. At issue in both Motions is the Plaintiffs' eligibility for an award of attorneys' fees as the prevailing party under the Individuals with Disability Education Act ("IDEA"). Plaintiffs (Teryn Smith and her parents) seek the fees incurred in their efforts to administratively challenge Teryn's Individualized Education Plan ("IEP"). That effort was resolved prior to a hearing when the parties reached a settlement agreement. The settlement disposed of all issues surrounding the IEP except the Plaintiffs' right to attorneys' fees.

Plaintiffs now claim fees under the IDEA as "prevailing parties" in the dispute. The District argues that under recent Supreme Court authority, one may not be considered the "prevailing party" in a matter resolved by settlement absent some sort of judicial imprimatur upon the settlement, even if the Plaintiff obtains through settlement all she sought through litigation. See Buckhannon Board & Care Home, Inc. v. West Virginia

1 Department of Health & Human Resources, 532 U.S. 598, 604 (2001). The District also argues that the
2 changes in Teryn's IEP before and after settlement of the case were minimal, and that she and her parents did
3 not "prevail" in the suit in any event<sup>1</sup>.

4 Plaintiffs disagree, and argue that Ninth Circuit authority both before and after Buckhannon holds that
5 a party to a private settlement can "prevail" absent a judicial sanction of the settlement. They argue that the 6 changes achieved in Teryn's IEP through settlement were significant, and that they therefore prevailed in the 7 action.

8 Summary of Facts.

9 The factual background to this dispute is largely agreed upon. Teryn Smith is a developmentally
10 disabled 12th grader at North Thurston High School. She has been in the District eight years, and has received
11 one-on-one special education support throughout that time. Each year, the District and Teryn's parents met
12 to discuss and formulate an IEP for Teryn. At issue in this case is the 2004 IEP, which resulted from a June
13 2004 meeting among the Smiths and members of the District's "IEP team," including Gloria Mott, Teryn's
14 special education teacher.

15 The IEP outlined the number of minutes per week that Teryn would be instructed in various programs.
16 Some of these were specific to her, including "life skills" (totaling 1525 minutes per week) such as leisure skills
17 and adapted physical education, physical therapy, occupational therapy and communication. The IEP also 18 called for 200 minutes per week of "regular" education with special education support. The June 2004 also 19 deleted 30 minutes per week of vision services as compared to Teryn's prior IEP.

20 It was agreed that Teryn's regular education class would be Digital Imagery in the fall of 2004.
21 However, due to a registration error or confusion, she was not timely registered in that class, leaving an 22 opening in her schedule. The District sought to change her IEP to replace that time with special education.
23 Teryn's parents did not agree, and the District ultimately (on November 1) enrolled Teryn in a regular 24 education drawing class. It was also determined that Teryn would take the Digital Imagery class in the second 25 semester of the school year.

26 In the meantime, however, Teryn's parents sought a due process hearing under the IDEA. The hearing
27

<sup>1</sup>The District also argues that some of the fees sought would not be recoverable under the IDEA in any event.

1 was scheduled for December, 2004. In October, Teryn's parents moved for a "Stay Put"<sup>2</sup> and to revise the
2 issues to be addressed in the hearing. The issues were revised, and the Administrative Law Judge ordered an
3 evidentiary hearing on October 25. Instead, the parties held another IEP meeting on that date, and resolved
4 the dispute (with the exception of the attorneys' fees issue now before this court). Teryn's IEP was revised
5 again as the result of that settlement.

6 The Plaintiffs argue that the resulting IEP modifications demonstrate that they were the prevailing
7 parties. They emphasize that the District sought to eliminate Teryn's regular education classes once the Digital
8 Imagery class was not available, and that they were successful in their resistance to that change. They argue
9 that this and other changes in the IEP were more than technical or de minimus changes. The other changes
10 they cite are: (1) Teryn was provided adaptive physical education every week rather than rotating with leisure
11 skills on an alternating basis; (2) Teryn's IEP expressly incorporated (and therefore made enforceable) the 12 District's "policy" against having an aide of the opposite sex be alone with a student; (3) the revised IEP
13 specified that Teryn could use vision consult services on an "as needed" basis; (4) the revised IEP included a 14 "transition plan" and assessment which was not specifically included in the June 2004 IEP; and (5) the IEP
15 envisioned a level of communication with Teryn's parents that was greater than that required under the IDEA.

16 The District argues that the IEP was changed or clarified in only four relatively minor respects, and that 17 the revised IEP changed primarily the wording, and not the practice, in these areas: (1) a "more explicit 18 reference" to the existing fact that Teryn would be provided a one-on-one aide in her regular education class;
19 (2) a "reassurance" that Teryn would receive individualized attention in various aspects of her school day; (3)
20 a "clarification" that Teryn would not normally be left alone with a male aide; and (4) a "clarification" that 21 Teryn's team could access vision services as needed.

22 Summary Judgment Standard.

23 Summary judgment is appropriate when, viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving
24 party, there is no genuine issue of material fact which would preclude summary judgment as a matter of law.
25 Once the moving party has satisfied its burden, it is entitled to summary judgment if the non-moving party fails
26 to present, by affidavits, depositions, answers to interrogatories, or admissions on file, "specific facts showing
27 that there is a genuine issue for trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324 (1986). "The mere 28

<sup>2</sup>The IDEA's "Stay Put" provision requires that a child remain in his or her then current educational placement pending resolution of the IDEA hearing.

1 existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the non-moving party's position is not sufficient." Triton
 2 Energy Corp. v. Square D Co., 68 F.3d 1216, 1221 (9th Cir. 1995). Factual disputes whose resolution would
 3 not affect the outcome of the suit are irrelevant to the consideration of a motion for summary judgment.
 4 Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). In other words, "summary judgment should be
 5 granted where the nonmoving party fails to offer evidence from which a reasonable [fact finder] could return
 6 a [decision] in its favor." Triton Energy, 68 F.3d at 1220.

7 Attorneys' Fees to the Prevailing Party.

8 The relevant portion of the IDEA provides:

9 In any action or proceeding brought under this section, the court, in its discretion, may award
 10 reasonable attorneys' fees as part of the costs--

11 (I) to a prevailing party who is the parent of a child with a disability;

12 (II) to a prevailing party who is a State educational agency or local educational agency against 13 the attorney of a parent who files a complaint or subsequent cause of action that is frivolous,
 14 unreasonable, or without foundation, or against the attorney of a parent who continued to 15 litigate after the litigation clearly became frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation; or

16 (III) to a prevailing State educational agency or local educational agency against the attorney 17 of a parent, or against the parent, if the parent's complaint or subsequent cause of action was 18 presented for any improper purpose, such as to harass, to cause unnecessary delay, or to 19 needlessly increase the cost of litigation.

20 20 U.S.C. §1415(i)(3)(B).

21 The parties acknowledge that Buckhannon Board & Care Home, Inc. v. West Virginia Department
 22 of Health & Human Resources, 532 U.S. 598, 604 (2001), is the Supreme Court's latest opinion on what 23 constitutes a "prevailing party" for purposes of awarding attorneys' fees under a variety of federal statutes.
 24 There, the Supreme Court expressly rejected the previously accepted "catalyst theory" for the achievement of 25 prevailing party status. It held that permitting fees to a party which has not obtained some judicially sanctioned
 26 change in the legal relationship of the parties is insufficient to confer prevailing party status.

27 Under the catalyst theory, a party could be considered to have prevailed if the lawsuit brought about 28 a voluntary change in the defendant's conduct, even if the suit was not pursued to judgment. Instead,
 29 Buckhannon held that prevailing party status can only be achieved through an enforceable judgment on the 30 merits, or some sort of "judicially sanctioned" settlement, such as a consent decree.

31 The Ninth Circuit has since held (along with "all of the other Circuits to confront the issue") that 32 Buckhannon applies to claims under the IDEA. See Shapiro ex rel. Shaprio v Paradise Valley United School
 33 District, 374 F.3d 857, 865 (9th Cir. 2004). Shapiro, citing Buckhannon, held that in order to "prevail" for

1 purposes of the fee-shifting provision of the IDEA, a plaintiff “must not only achieve some material alteration
 2 of the legal relationship of the parties, but that change must also be judicially sanctioned.” Id.; also citing
 3 Roberson v. Guiliani, 346 F.2d 75, 79 (2nd Cir. 2003).

4 Plaintiffs do not concede that Buckhannon specifically applies to the IDEA, and argue that Shapiro did
 5 little more than quote a Second Circuit case [Roberson] which in turn had a distinguishable factual context.
 6 They also argue that Shapiro did not directly address another Ninth Circuit precedent, Barrios v. California
 7 Interscholastic Federation, 277 F.3d 1128 (9th Cir. 2002), which (despite Buckhannon) reiterated the prior 8 Ninth Circuit view that a “legally enforceable settlement agreement” resulting in a “material alteration of the 9 parties legal relationship” was sufficient to confer “prevailing party” status.

10 Barrios cited and relied upon pre-Buckhannon precedent, including Fisher v. SJB -P.D., 214 F.3d 1115
 11 (9th Cir. 1999) (“Under applicable Ninth Circuit law, a plaintiff “prevails” when he or she enters into a legally 12 enforceable settlement agreement against the defendant.”). In Barrios, the plaintiff baseball coach asserted
 13 an ADA claim against his employer, a school district. The District had ordered him not to be on the baseball
 14 field in his wheelchair. He eventually sued and the parties settled. The Ninth Circuit found that the agreement
 15 was sufficient to confer prevailing party status on the plaintiff:

16 Here, the settlement agreement prohibits the [Defendant] from excluding Barrios from on-field
 17 coaching of baseball games, and requires it to pay Barrios $10,000 in damages. Given that 18 Barrios can enforce the terms of the settlement agreement against the [Defendant], the district
 19 court correctly concluded that Barrios was the “prevailing party” in his civil rights litigation.

20 While dictum in Buckhannon suggests that a plaintiff “prevails” only when he or she 21 receives a favorable judgment on the merits or enters into a court-supervised consent
 22 decree, [] we are not bound by that dictum, particularly when it runs contrary to this court’s
 23 holding in Fischer, by which we are bound. Moreover, the parties, in their settlement, 24 agreed that the district court would retain jurisdiction over the issue of attorneys’ fees, thus 25 providing sufficient judicial oversight to justify an award of attorneys’ fees and costs.

Barrios, 277 F.3d at 1135.

26 The question, then, is whether Shapiro or Barrios accurately reflects the state of the law following
 27 Buckhannon. Notwithstanding the Barrios court’s characterization of the Buckhannon rule as “dicta,” it 28 seems clear that after that case, a private settlement must do more than change the legal relationship between the parties, and it must carry more of a judicial imprimatur than the right to have a settlement

1 agreement enforced in court, in order to confer “prevailing party” status. Simply preserving the
2 jurisdiction of the presiding court to enforce a private settlement agreement is not akin to the court
3 “sanctioning” the agreement. Doing so is not measurably different than simply agreeing, in any contract, to 4 the jurisdiction and venue of a suit seeking to enforce the agreement. In such cases, it cannot be said that
5 the court has sanctioned the agreement – the court simply has no stake in the agreement, and no input or 6 oversight as to its terms. Buckhannon requires more, as Shapiro correctly points out. If and to the extent
7 Barrios can be read to permit an award of fees based only on the parties’ agreement that the court retains 8 jurisdiction, it is inconsistent with Buckhannon.

11 For these reasons, the court agrees with the District that the settlement agreement at issue is not
12 sufficient to confer prevailing party status under the IDEA or Buckhannon as a matter of law. This is true
13 even if, as the Plaintiffs argue, they did achieve more than a technical or de minimus victory through the 14 settlement agreement. The court need not address the magnitude of the success, however, as the Smiths
15 have not prevailed. Plaintiffs’ Motion for Summary Judgment [Dkt. #9] is DENIED, and the District’s
16 Motion for Summary Judgement [Dkt. #21] is GRANTED.
